Marsha is a first-generation farmer in this country. She studied agroecology and rural development at UC Berkeley, and gained hands-on farming experience at the Center for Agroecology and Sustainable Farming Systems (CASFS) at UC Santa Cruz, and Agriculture and Land Based Training Association (ALBA) in Salinas.

She also served as an AmeriCorps volunteer doing food justice work in Silicon Valley. In 2013, she started her own farm, Oya Organics, on one acre of land, and today, farms 20 acres of certified organic mixed vegetable in Hollister.
